This course created an engaged learning experience about many facets of civil wars in the last century, and created an environment of active discussion which created more intriguing questions than concrete answers.

This course is entirely based on readings of scholarly articles instead of textbook material. Surprisingly, the materials came together really well and developed frameworks that were key to the course. The assignment load was pretty light, consisting of 2 essays and 2 presentations. We had a lot of freedom choosing the topics to write/present on for the assignments, which made them pretty fun to do. The class discussions were stimulating too. In general a very fun and insightful course!

This was a great course that gave a good idea of the literature out there about civil wars. There were a lot of dense readings so be wary, but they were always thoroughly discussed so if you missed one for class, you would still understand what is going on.

GREAT class! Makes you really think, and since there's a lot of flexibility in terms of choosing the civil war you want to focus on through the class, it's definitely going to be interesting. Super cool conversations in class, no 'wrong' answers, and great learning atmosphere even over Zoom.

This professor's first ever class was in Spring Semester 2021, featuring all-zoom classes, a global pandemic, the most disruptive snowstorm in a century, and a personal tragedy. And yet, she was a wonderful professor. Profe Liana Reardon-Reyes is a strong educator who will only grow over time.

Professor Reyes was great and very receptive to students. She understands that times are hard, and made sure to be extra considerate of any trouble you brought to her. She encouraged us to be comfortable asking questions and didn't expect us to blindly agree with the literature.

Prof Reyes is one of the best instructors I've had at Rice so far in terms of the classroom experience. You do have to be alert in class but it's easy to pay attention if you're actively talking or even listening. She's very approachable and responsive to feedback too.

Prof. Reyes-Reardon is a fantastic teacher. She understands the struggles of students and is very flexible if you communicate with her. She makes really challenging readings seem easy to understand, and has a vast knowledge of Civil War literature.

There are a lot of readings in the class, but she makes it worth your time. Highly reccomend.
